

Goals of Student Life office stay intact despite recent changes in management

MICHELLE HIGHAM and JULIE NEWMAN

Although a major breakup in the chain of command in Student Life Department has given it a completely different managerial look, the objectives of the office will remain the same.

Student Life will continue to provide a "variety of services that supplement academics at BYU and enrich the lives and university experiences of students," said Maren Mouritsen, newly appointed dean of student life.

resident Jeffrey R. Holland made the announcement regarding Mouritsen's appointment recently as part of reorganization of student life under Executive Vice President John B. Stokholm.

Mouritsen is replacing David M. Sorenson who has served as dean for the past six and a half years. Sorenson has been appointed as the new coordinator of the Developmental Team and Special Projects in the student life area. Working under him as a new administrator will be V. Con

Osborne, former chairman of the Multicultural Education Department.

Osborne views the changes as a realignment of academic units under one department. He said multicultural education will cease to exist as a separate entity and will become a service unit within the Student Life Department.

The new director of multicultural education is Max W. Swenson.

Ryan L. Thomas will now supervise activities involved with multicultural education as part of his responsibilities as the new assistant dean of student life.

The former director of student programs will also be responsible for University standards, handicapped programs, veterans affairs and the new reentry awareness program.

"There has been a lot of thinking going on for several months," Thomas said of the changes within the department. He said these changes will provide new challenges and "fresh blood" in the department, but he does not anticipate any dramatic new directions in policy, he said.

Thomas' former position is being filled by Tamara

Quick, whose responsibilities will include ASBYU and the Ernest L. Wilkinson Center. She will work directly with student government in an advisory capacity and said she was thrilled to see the change.

Clyde E. Sullivan has been named the new associate dean of student life, in addition to his current position as director of Counseling and Personal Services.

"He will be responsible for the entire college," said Thomas.

Also named to new positions were Lanny R. Gneiting, who is the new assistant to the dean, and Evelyn H. Robbins, the new administrative aide.

Gneiting will be the "financial controller" of the department, said Thomas. Gneiting comes to the department as the former budget officer in the multicultural education department.

Leaving the department soon will be Gail S. Halvorsen who will be retiring in December. "I'm at that magic age," he said.

"Part of the rationale behind the changes has to do with the retirement of Halvorsen," said Thomas.

Halvorsen said his retirement may be a factor but he doesn't think it's the pivotal point behind the changes. "President Holland has said that there ought to be a change after someone has served in a position for a given period of time. I believe that Sorenson asked for a change about a year ago and we are now seeing the results," Halvorsen said. "It has always been a policy to rotate people wherever possible," he said.

The success of student life programs depends on the ability to recognize the need for change and improvement in programs. Mouritsen said she will try to be responsive to changes in students and in the university.

As a tribute to the people who work in student life, Mouritsen compared BYU with other schools. "Our young people are just the best. We have really fine people in student life who really care about young people."

Mouritsen was named assistant executive vice president last June after serving as associate dean of Student Life and executive assistant to the president.

University enrollment increases

SHANNON OSTLER
Staff Reporter

Enrollment is down at many universities, but an easing number of people are applying for admission to BYU, and that may be a result of the large number of LDS Church members.

A major factor that influences enrollment at BYU is the increase in the LDS church population, according to Jae R. Ballif, BYU provost and academic vice president. "Even though enrollment down at other universities, the number of people in the church who want to attend BYU has increased," he said.

Another factor is that "there are an increased number of young people in the church who realize a good education makes them more capable of living and succeeding in the purpose of life," he said.

Many other influences affect BYU's enrollment, including cost of tuition and the economy. He said increased recognition of BYU's strength as a university should also be taken into account.

Even changes in the length of missionary service have a "small effect" in the number of students who apply, for a particular semester, he said.

Enrollment higher

Despite an increase in BYU's tuition, the 1985-86 enrollment is slightly higher than that of 1984-85, according to statistics prepared by Institutional Studies, total day school enrollment is 26,894, up slightly from last year's 26,700. Fifty-six percent are men and 44 percent women make up the total enrollment. This does not include total evening enrollment, which is 1,814.

A percentage breakdown of total enrollment shows 78 percent of BYU students are single, married or divorced, and 27 percent are married. Foreign students make up 5.5 percent of the total. Eighty-eight percent of BYU students are members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Except for a seven percent increase in the percentage of married students, these percentages remained fairly consistent since 1965.

Business college largest

The College of Business is the largest with 4,429 students enrolled — 16 percent of the university. Sixty-nine percent of business majors are men and 31 percent are women.

University Studies and the College of Engineering and Technology comprise 13 percent each of the students, but University Studies' enrollment of 3,679 is slightly more than engineering's 3,614.

The College of Engineering and Technology has 3,614 students, 61 percent men and 39 percent women.

Separation issue before Supreme Court will not affect LDS Seminary organization

DIANE RANCK BURHOE
Staff Writer

Seminary programs of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will not be affected by argument now before the U.S. Supreme Court regarding the constitutionality of allowing students to study in public schools, says a church spokesman.

The issues concern the use of public facilities to hold religious activities, said L. LeFevre, manager of press relations for the church. "The church is not involved in that," he said.

Not affected

Once the church uses what is called "released time" for its seminary and institute activities, it will not be affected by the court's decision at all, LeFevre said.

With the released time, "we meet totally on our own property in our own buildings," LeFevre said.

He stressed that the current issue before the court centers around those organizations that hold religious activities during regular school periods in school buildings, and that the LDS Church's program of release time is different.

There are many states other than Utah that also allow released time for religious activities, LeFevre said.

William E. Berrett, retired administrator of Seminary and Institute for the LDS Church, said the church has always believed in separation of church and state.

Not taught

"We go back clear to 1888 when there was a commissioner of education appointed to Utah," said Berrett. "From that time religion could not be taught in public schools."

"We have always had separate buildings," Berrett said. "We did not get any permission to do otherwise."

Before public schools were provided by the federal government, school meetings took place in churches. But after the public schools were built, afternoon religion classes were moved into the chapels, he said.

Orem Council sets UTA guidelines

Hours fixed for bus service to mall

By ED WRIGHT
Senior Reporter

The final solution to the controversy of UTA buses staging at the University Mall eluded the Orem City Council Tuesday night as the council voted to grant a modified temporary conditional use permit to the public-owned carrier.

The new permit prohibits the UTA from the North end of the mall before 8 a.m. and after 9 p.m.

The Orem City Council, UTA management, University Mall management and the residents on the North and East ends of the mall have discussed at the length the problem in the recent past of bus routes through and around the mall.

Residents have complained of excessive noise from buses traveling the area in the early morning and late evening.

In the sometimes emotional meeting, council member Stella Welsh told UTA representative John Pingree, "You haven't come up with a better solution to the staging problem at the mall. I'm ready to revoke the approval and let the mall and UTA work out the problem."

The council members' impatience with the situation was reflected by Councilman Glen R. Zimmerman when he told the council, "We should require the mall and the UTA to get together and come back to us with a proposal we can accept."

Pingree countered the criticism by saying the bus line had been authorized by the city and voter referendum to operate a bus system. "We are doing our best, under the circumstances, to operate our system efficiently," he said.

Though most residents who spoke during the public debate strongly opposed any concessions to the UTA, area resident Fern Wilson rose to the defense of the buses. "Many people need the buses," she said. "Handicapped, elderly and students rely on the bus for their transportation. Fifty people signed the petition against buses at the mall, should we let 3,000 people be inconvenienced by their wants."

"I don't see any person on the petition who has a dead end public road," Wilson continued. "Their (the 50 petitioners) wants will cause great inconvenience to the riders of the bus."

In an emotion-filled voice, resident Patie Samera pleaded with the council. "You don't know what it's like to be in that (North of Mall) area and be woken up by 150-160 buses every morning six days a week. It's upset our daily lives. It's to the point where I don't want to live there anymore," she said.

"It's not our intent to get the buses out of Orem, we just want to get them off our backs," added petitioner Pat Zamora.

Bombs killed 2 in SLC; attacks believed related

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A downtown office building and a suburban Salt Lake City home were rocked by explosions Tuesday, killing two people in what authorities said were related bomb blasts.

"This was definitely a sophisticated type weapon," said Salt Lake County Sheriff Pete Hayward. "It was a very sophisticated type weapon."

The explosions, three hours apart and both triggered by motion, sent bomb squads searching through the homes and businesses of acquaintances of the victims for other explosives.

Katherine Sheets, the 50-year-old victim in the second blast at 11:21 a.m., stepped out of her house and picked up a newspaper that was resting on a box, which then exploded.

"We feel there is a definite connection between the city's explosion and what happened here today" at the residence, he said, adding that the bomb at the home was thought to be intended for the victim's husband, J. Gary Sheets, because his name was on it.

Steven F. Christensen, 31, a stockbroker on the sixth-floor of a downtown Judge building, was killed when a box bearing his name and lying in a corridor just outside his office exploded, killing him instantly.

Police Chief Bud Willoughby said investigators were pursuing two possible motives for what could have been the work of a paid assassin. One centers on the former business relationship between Christensen and Sheets, the other on Christensen's involvement with controversial documents relating to the origins of the Mormon Church.

"All the players are involved in both," he said. "We are leaning toward the business transactions," but he said it was doubtful the case involved either a past or present employee.

"Somebody is very, very upset," Willoughby said.

Hayward said a witness at the blasting early Tuesday saw someone in an elevator who was carrying a box addressed to Christensen. He refused to say if the person was a man or woman.

Authorities put together a composite drawing based on what the witness saw, but did not immediately release it to the media.

Willoughby said Sheets was founder and president of Coordinated Financial Services and that Christensen had been a corporate officer. He said the company, which deals chiefly in real estate, property management and investments, had been in financial difficulty recently.

Student worship clubs subject of court case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration Tuesday urged the Supreme Court to allow student religious groups to meet for prayer and worship during public high school activity periods.

"Congress has concluded that high school students are sufficiently mature to make the same distinctions we all make between neutrality and endorsement," government lawyer Charles Fried told the court.

He said a federal appeals court decision that banned such meetings at a Williamsport, Pa., high school casts grave constitutional doubt "over the Equal Access Act of 1984."

In it, Congress made it unlawful for high schools receiving federal money and allowing some student groups to conduct meetings on school property to deny access to any student group based on what it proposes to discuss.

During a four-hour argument session Tuesday, seven justices raised the possibility that the court might decide the constitutional issue presented in the Williamsport case.

Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, John Paul Stevens and William J. Brennan repeatedly questioned whether the case should be dismissed because of a procedural defect.

Fried and the two other lawyers who participated in the argument session suggested that such an outcome would be inconclusive and unsatisfactory.

The dispute, the latest outgrowth of the high court's 1962 decision outlawing organized prayer sessions in public schools, arose when students in 1981 sought permission to meet at Williamsport Area High School during twice-a-week activity periods.

During those periods, held during school hours, about 25 different student groups as varied as the Future Homemakers of America, the Spanish Club and the student newspaper met. Faculty advisers are present.

Students also have the option of remaining in their homerooms, studying in the school library or seeking career guidance.

"Congress has concluded that high school students are sufficiently mature to make the same distinctions we all do between neutrality and endorsement."

club's initial meeting.

The students sued, and a federal trial judge ruled for them. The religious club was allowed to meet during the 1983-84 school year.

But the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year ruled that allowing the meetings would violate the constitutionally required separation of church and state.

The trial judge's ruling had not been appealed to the 3rd Circuit Court by the full school board, but only by then-board member John C. Youngman Jr.

It was Youngman's "legal standing" to mount such a challenge that was questioned by several justices Tuesday.

Fried suggested that Congress' interest would best be served by reversing the appeals court as a matter of constitutional law.

Having the case wash out on the procedural "legal standing" issue would leave a "cloud" over the 1984 federal law, he said.

The students initially were granted permission to form a religious club, but after its initial meeting the club was told it would be "legally improper" for school officials to give the impression the meetings were endorsed or approved by the school.

Two more suspects charged in hijacking

GENOA, Italy (AP) — Investigators issued arrest warrants Tuesday for two more Palestinians, bringing to seven the number of people charged in the hijacking of the Achille Lauro during a Mediterranean cruise that began in this northern port Oct. 3.

Gennaro Calabrese de Foa, chief prosecutor of Genoa, would not identify the two Palestinians, reveal the charges against them, or say if they were in custody.

Italian news agencies said one was aboard the Italian cruise liner and left it in Alexandria, Egypt, the last stop before the hijacking. They said the second bought the cruise tickets in Genoa that the four pirates used.

Judicial sources said at least one accomplice in Genoa helped the four hijackers. The sources, who spoke on the condition they were not identified, quoted the accused pirates as telling interrogators that explosives and submachine guns were put in their cabin before they boarded.

According to Italian news media, the four men charged with hijacking the ship Oct. 7 have been moved from Sicily to a prison in Spoleto, in the Umbrian hills 80 miles north of Rome.

Reagan: no apology for plane interception

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — President Reagan said Tuesday the United States has nothing to apologize for in its interception of an Egyptian jetliner carrying the hijackers of the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro.

Arriving in Boise for a political appearance, Reagan was asked about Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's demand for an apology, and he replied, "No comment."

But when asked if the United States had anything to apologize for, Reagan replied, "Never!"

Earlier, aboard Air Force One, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan had told Egyptian and Italian officials he was "confident he did the right thing" in intercepting the airliner last Thursday.

The handling of the hijacking incident has frayed the normally close relations between the United States and both Italy and Egypt. Mubarak said on Monday he wanted Reagan to apologize.

Nobel-prize winner pays tribute to friend

BELMONT, Mass. (AP) — The newest Nobel laureate in economics paid tribute Tuesday to a student who died in 1951 after helping lay the groundwork for theories on why people and nations save money.

"He was a very, very dear friend and a great collaborator," Franco Modigliani, professor of economics and finance at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said of Richard Brumberg, a graduate student who wrote two papers with him on savings.

Just before the publication of the second paper, Brumberg died of a brain tumor. He was 25.

"It was a great personal tragedy," Modigliani, 67, said at his comfortable home in the Boston suburbs, where he was up early fixing his breakfast of rye toast and coffee.

Modigliani's deep feeling for colleagues such as Brumberg and his work that has made him so popular a theorist and professor, students say.

"He gets insulted if you're working on something interesting and you don't come and talk to him about it," said Jim Kahn, a graduate student in the Sloan School of Management, where Modigliani has taught since 1962.

Helicopter plunges, killing 15 marines

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A helicopter carrying 19 Marines plunged into the ocean while taking off from a ship for maneuvers in pre-dawn darkness Tuesday, and officials said 15 Marines were killed and four rescued.

Gunnery Sgt. John Simmons said the twin-rotor CH-46D "Sea Knight" helicopter, flown by a crew of four, crashed in 50 feet of water about four miles off shore on takeoff from the USS Guadalcanal.

One body was recovered shortly after the 6 a.m. accident and four survivors were plucked from the water near the carrier-like helicopter and troop ship, Simmons said.

Navy and Marine divers conducted a search and rescue operation in Onslow Bay much of the day for more survivors, but Simmons said the effort was called off in late-afternoon and hope had been abandoned of finding anyone else alive.

Names of the dead were withheld pending notification of relatives.

Professor wins prize for economics work

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Franco Modigliani, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor, won the 1985 Nobel Prize in economics Tuesday for theories he developed 30 years ago on personal savings and the value of businesses.

"I am obviously very pleased," the 67-year-old economist said at his home in Belmont, Mass. "It's always nice to hear that the work I've done is appreciated and regarded as important."

Modigliani, who emigrated from his native Italy to the United States at the beginning of World War II, was cited for theories on how people save for their old age and for refining economic thinking on how to determine the market value of businesses.

Tuesday's award marked the 18th time in the 17 years of the prize that it was won or shared by an American.

Professor Assar Lindbeck, a member of the Swedish prize jury, said after the announcement that Modigliani's work "is not explaining what we should do, it explains what we see and helps us understand the world."

Collapsed lock wall creates traffic jam

THOROLD, Ontario (AP) — Ships carrying grain, steel and military equipment backed up Tuesday on the St. Lawrence Seaway, and one official predicted it would be weeks before a collapsed lock wall would be repaired and traffic allowed to resume.

"It's absolutely impossible to give an idea of the exact length of time," Seaway Authority President William A. O'Neil said about the repairs.

"We're not looking for a permanent repair," he said. "Our primary objective is to get navigation going. But I fully expect we will be open before the end of the shipping season."

John Adams, deputy chief engineer for the St. Lawrence Development Corp., the U.S. operator of the waterway, said about 55 ships were involved — 15 moored in Lake Ontario waiting to go west, seven in the Welland canal, eight in Lake Erie and another 25 at other Great Lakes ports.

Adams said that number could increase as more ships steam into the system.

The Welland, which links the Atlantic Ocean, the St. Lawrence River and Lake Ontario with the rest of the Great Lakes, is scheduled to close for the winter at the end of December.

A 125-foot-long piece of a wall in Lock No. 7 of the canal disintegrated Monday, trapping the Liberian freighter Furia for about eight hours.

Court to determine media pretrial rights

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court said Tuesday it will decide whether the public and news media have a right to attend pretrial hearings, the decisive stage in nine out of 10 criminal prosecutions.

The court thus agreed to settle a question left unanswered by two of its rulings since 1980 that granted the press and public the right to be present at criminal trials and at jury selection proceedings.

In the latest case, news agencies challenged their exclusion from a 41-day pretrial hearing for a California nurse, Robert Rubane Diaz, who later was convicted of killing 12 hospital patients.

In the case, the Riverside Press-Enterprise contends the public and news agencies have a right to attend pretrial hearings, where nearly all criminal prosecutions are conducted.

The newspaper is challenging its exclusion from the pretrial proceedings for Diaz, a coronary care nurse at the Community Hospital of the Valleys in Perris, Calif.

Newspaper strike reaches 39th day

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The walkout against The Philadelphia Inquirer and the Daily News reached its 39th day on Thursday, becoming the longest newspaper strike in the city's history.

Sidney Ginsberg, a mailers' union attorney, declined to say if the unions and Philadelphia Newspapers Inc. were close to reaching an agreement.

However, Stuart Bykofsky, a spokesman for the 1,200-member Newspaper Guild, the largest of the nine unions, said there had been some progress.

Arguments, testimony begin in murder trial

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Prosecutors told jurors in the first-degree murder trial of inmate Ronnie Lee Gardner on Tuesday they would be hearing "a case about a prisoner's ruthless and violent escape from his guards."

Opening arguments began 10 minutes after an eight-woman, four-man jury was seated in 3rd District Court following a week of intensive questioning of an initial pool of 80. A defense attorney was expected to make an opening statement later Tuesday.

Gardner, 24, is accused in the shooting death of Salt Lake attorney Michael Bardell, who was gunned down at the downtown Metropolitan Hall of Justice as Gardner was being brought in for a hearing on another charge April 2.

"This case includes some of the most serious of crimes," said Deputy Salt Lake County Attorney Robert Stott. "From the evidence, you'll find the case is about a prisoner's ruthless and violent escape from his guards."

Besides the capital homicide charge, which carries a possible death sentence, Gardner faces four other felony counts, including attempted murder in the wounding of bailiff Nicholas Kirk, escape from official custody and aggravated kidnapping.

Chrysler-union talks bring no settlement

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — Chrysler Corp. bargained with the U.S. and Canadian autoworkers unions Tuesday against the midnight expiration of their labor contracts, and the top U.S. union official cautioned "the makings of a settlement aren't there."

But an apparent decision by Chrysler to bargain in Canada largely on the pattern of Canadian contracts at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. raised hopes of settlements on both sides of the border.

Owen Bieber, president of the United Auto Workers, which represents the 70,000 American workers, said a lot of work remained.

Nixon will mediate baseball-umpire rift

TORONTO (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon has been selected as the arbitrator in the contract dispute between baseball umpires and the two major leagues.

The site and date of the hearing will depend on the outcome of the league playoffs, it was learned from two sources who spoke on the condition that their names not be used.

Radio station music serenades cathedral

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Heads were bowed for noon Mass at the Cathedral of the Madeleine when a disk jockey was heard on high.

The soft but unmistakable sounds of a commercial radio station somehow got in through the 1,100-seat cathedral's loud speaker system, despite efforts to uproot it, said the Rev. Francis Mannion.

Student government asks University of Utah for halt in investments

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A student government call for the University of Utah to stop investing in companies doing business in South Africa was discussed by the Institutional Council Monday.

The resolution, approved by the Student Assembly earlier this month, was taken under advisement by the campus governing body Monday.

Student body president Ned Stringham said the resolution was an expression of students' opposition to the racist system of apartheid in South Africa.

Institutional Council chairman John A. Dastrum said the resolution would be discussed at a council's November meeting.

He said the university has $400,000 invested in companies with business connections in South Africa.

The University of Utah faculty senate has approved two resolutions dealing with South Africa, Irwin Altman, vice president for academic affairs, told council members. The measures condemn apartheid and called for educational opportunities regarding South Africa such as panel discussions, speakers or courses.

"This is an important topic and it's worthy of the students' effort," he said.

Agreement reached in 87-day strike

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. and the United Steelworkers union reached a tentative contract agreement Tuesday that could end an 87-day strike, the steel industry's biggest shutdown in a quarter-century.

The Associated Press learned that 19 local union presidents, bargaining for 8,200 picketing workers, voted 12-6 to recommend a wage and benefit package worth up to $19 an hour. The contract is still subject to ratification by the rank and file.

Study says women more likely than men to quit teaching jobs

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Women teachers are more likely to quit their jobs than their male colleagues, and for different reasons, but the study was likely to return to the profession, a study shows.

The survey, conducted by the state Office of Education, also found most teachers of both sexes had fewer than five years on the job, a trend the report said was nationwide. More than half of the teachers who resigned last year had less than five years' tenure.

The two reasons for departure cited most frequently by female teachers are relocation to improve the husband's job prospects and increased family responsibilities, including childbearing, the report said.

The most common reasons for men are early retirement or other jobs.

Many of the factors seen in teacher resignation patterns 25 years ago still operate today, said Delta man becomes 500th patient to receive heart surgery at UVRMC

Delta man becomes 500th patient to receive heart surgery at UVRMC

MYRON LEE
Universe Staff Writer

A 45-year-old Delta man has become the 500th patient to have open heart surgery at the Utah Valley Regional Medical Center.

Nel Forster said he's just happy to be alive after years of living in fear of heart problems.

Forster has been under the care of Dr. Glade Smith and Dr. Clint Stander, cardio-vascular and thoracic surgeons. He said they have helped him overcome the bottled-up fear of heart trouble he had since his father died of a heart attack 36 years ago.

Sept. 6, Forster, himself, suffered a heart attack and was rushed to Delta Community Medical Center, Smith said.

After Forster was stabilized in Delta, he was transferred to UVRMC, where Smith and Stander successfully completed a three vessel bypass operation, after a few days of observation.

"My initial reaction was relief that surgery was possible," said Forster. "I figured that if they couldn't find something to operate on, I would be signing my life away. It is a real relief to get added years to my life," he said.

Forster said his brother had a heart attack at the age of 46.

"I know what heart trouble is," Forster said. "My father-in-law was the 200th heart patient at UVRMC two years ago."

Forster was very complimentary about UVRMC and the staff that served him. "The people in southern and central Utah are fortunate that UVRMC is available to them when they need help," he said.

Smith said, "the number of personnel that made this and other operations successful is overwhelming."

The surgical team consisted of the two surgeons, one anesthesiologist, three nurses and a pump technician.

"Dr. Smith (the main surgeon in the operation) along with the entire hospital staff have a great deal of warmth and care for the patients," said Forster. According to Stander, the success rate of the heart operations has been very high for the past three years and five months.

"Patients in this part of the country are a healthy group," he said. "This is one of the reasons that we have such a high success rate."

Forster was released six days after the operation. The average time is seven days, said Stander.

Postal workers sing 'We Are the World'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Postmasters and congressmen sang "We Are the World" as the campaign of Phyllis Alroy, of Princeton, N.J., to put the message "Help End Hunger" on a postage stamp, became a reality Tuesday in a Capitol Hill ceremony.

These stamps "are more than miniature pieces of art, they are powerful motivators," said Postmaster General Paul N. Carlin, recalling how a previous stamp urging Americans to give blood sparked a dramatic increase in donors.

Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, who used his clout as head of the subcommittee that oversees the Postal Service to get the 120 million commemorative stamps issued, said he would use one of the first stamps to mail a letter to President Reagan saying a greater national commitment is required to end hunger at home and abroad.

The stamps go on sale nationwide Wednesday.

"We Are the World" was recorded by American rock musicians in an effort to raise money for starving Africans.

The oldest building on BYU's campus will become a symbol of the university's highest aspirations after its commemorative opening today, said a university official.

The ceremony is part of a Founders Day celebration. On Oct. 16, 1975, the deed making Brigham Young Academy an official school was sworn up.

Dr. William E. Evenson, associate academic vice president, said the newly restored Karl G. Maeser Memorial Building, dedicated in 1911, in help us catch the vision of what a mission really is as a university.

Maeser, the university's first president, stood for educational and moral principles that are now being emphasized in national reports on higher education, Evenson said.

The building's limestone exterior was sandblasted and repaired. A statue of Maeser was moved from in front of the Eyring Science Center to the northeast side of the Maeser Building.

"Dr. Maeser stood in precept and practice for the symmetrical development of mind, body and spirit, that is, of the complete soul in education," said James E. Talmage, a former leader of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Evenson said Maeser believed in the value of a strong general education, accompanied by a strong major. He also believed students should be imbued with a sense of moral values.

"His emphasis on liberal education was remarkably close to what we're hearing in national studies today," Evenson said.

permanent home.

The building was the first edifice built on "Temple Hill." It was built as a memorial to Maeser, who was called to be the first president of Brigham Young Academy in 1876.

At that time, the academy was one year old and had an enrollment of 29 students.

Ronald B. Jones, of the university's Planning and Architecture Department, was the architect of the restoration. He oversaw the 18-month project that has brought the Maeser Building as nearly as possible to its original form.

All the original oak was stripped and refinished. Two plaster busts, one of Joseph Smith, the other of Brigham Young, are being bronzed.

Offices that had been built in the lecture hall balcony were removed and the balcony restored.

Brett's homer sparks K.C. to 5-3 playoff win

TORONTO (AP) — George Brett's record ninth playoff home run broke a fifth-inning tie Tuesday night, triggering the Kansas City Royals to a 5-3 triumph over the Toronto Blue Jays and forcing the American League playoffs to a decisive seventh game.

The Royals, who trailed the series 3-1 at one point, will start 20-game winner Bret Saberhagen in Wednesday night's seventh game. Toronto will answer with its own ace, right-hander Dave Stieb, who won the opener.

Brett again gave Kansas City the spark it needed, and once again his victim was Blue Jays starter Doyle Alexander. In Game 3, Brett homered twice and doubled off Alexander during a 4-for-4 night that enabled the Royals to win their first game of this series and end a 10-game postseason losing streak.

This time, Brett homered far over the right-center field fence with one out in the fifth to break a 2-2 tie. The homer, which moved him past Steve Garvey for the most home runs in major league playoff history, came one pitch after he swung and awkwardly missed a 2-1 delivery from Alexander.

Unlike his one-man performance in Game 3, Brett had plenty of help from his teammates on the clear, 54-degree night as Kansas City again frustrated Toronto's attempt to bring the first World Series to Canada.

Dan Quisenberry, who gave up two game-winning hits earlier in the series, came on with two outs and two on in the ninth. Once again facing the winning run, Quisenberry struck out Garvey long to end the game. Long threw his bat toward the backstop in disgust as he walked away from the plate.

Veteran Hal McRae, playing in his 44th postseason game, singled home Kansas City's first run in the first inning, and doubled home the second run in the third. McRae followed Brett's homer with a single for his third hit of the game, but was left stranded.

Buddy Biancalana and Lonnie Smith delivered RBI doubles in the sixth that increased the lead to 5-2.

Biancalana, just 1-for-10 in the playoffs before a single in the second inning, doubled home Jim Sundberg, who led off the sixth with a walk and was sacrificed second.

The hit finished Alexander, and Smith greeted Dennis Lamp with a check-swing opposite-field double down the right-field line that scored Biancalana.

Mark Gubicza, forced into a starting role for the Royals, kept Kansas City even terms through five innings, getting the victory with help from Bud Black, who pitched 3 1/3 before giving way to Quisenberry.

Marilissa Salmi, left, and Sari Virtanen, right, BYU's Finnish recruits, go up for a block in recent volleyball action. Both players come to Provo with a wealth of international experience.

Finnish one-two punch a knockout for spikers

By SUSAN FUGE
Universe Sports Writer

Two of BYU volleyball's newest recruits have something in common — national heritage. Marilissa Salmi is from Kurikka, Finland and Sari Virtanen is from Sivikkala in the same country. BYU first spotted Marilissa Salmi — "Mikey" to her teammates — in California in 1981. She was playing volleyball for a high school as a foreign exchange student. The Cougars started recruiting her, but she wanted to go home and play for the Finnish National team first.

Salmi and Virtanen met and became friends while they played for the national team. As Salmi continued to get letters and information from BYU, she shared them with Virtanen. They were recruiting middle blockers too, so we said sure," said BYU coach Elaine Michaelis.

Virtanen said that BYU came and watched her at a National Team camp she was attending and approved the deal.

Salmi came to BYU "because it had a good volleyball team."

At 22, Virtanen is a junior according to NCAA records because of her age and her experience playing international volleyball. Salmi, 20, is a sophomore in eligibility. Both are freshmen academically.

Once Virtanen and Salmi decided to come to BYU they were given a lot of "information" about the school from concerned acquaintances.

"Because we are not Mormons, we were expecting strange things," said Salmi.

"We didn't exactly know what to expect because we had so many different kinds of information coming from everywhere," Virtanen said. Playing BYU's style of volleyball has been different for the two Finns. "Here, the players call what they want to hit. In Finland, the setter calls the hit."

Virtanen and Salmi find it easier to communicate in Finnish when they are on the court. "It is faster for me to tell her what I want to do," said Virtanen.

"It is also good because the other team doesn't know what we're going to do," said Salmi.

The other team members know the Finnish words for the numbers one and two so Salmi can call the plays in Finnish.

This season, Virtanen's fine play has resulted in All-Tournament team selection at the BYU Pepsi Invitational and the Nebraska Power Classic. Three weeks ago she was High Country Athletic Conference Player of the Week.

Virtanen finds that her position is more specialized here than in Finland where only one substitution is allowed. "Substitutions are allowed three times here, so you play only front or only back," she said.

"Everyone on the team likes to develop all the skills because every now and then you need them all anyway."

The adjustment to living in America has not been too hard for either of them. Having a roommate from their native country helps.

"When you get mad you can speak Finnish," Salmi said.

"I think we may speak too much Finnish, but then I think we speak enough English, too," Virtanen added.

They feel that their ability to speak and read English has improved from their exposure to U.S. culture. Studying for classes is the hardest thing for them and they read with a dictionary in hand.

"Still, it's fun to be together," Virtanen said. "We can then laugh at that which troubles us."

Tuipulotu, Buck, White garner player of the week

Big plays propelled this week's Cougar Coaches' players of the week winners to their respective honors.

Running back Tom Tuipulotu scored on an electrifying 45-yard scamper for part of his 120 yards rushing to earn the back of the week award.

Tackle Jason Buck sacked the quarterback once and had three QB hurries for defensive lineman of the week honors.

Linebacker Leon White batted down an Aztec pass and then grabbed it for the interception. The senior co-captain was named linebacker of the week for the second week in a row.

Wide receiver Scott Norberg broke a tackle to score a 20-yard touchdown and was named receiver of the week for the first time this season.

Center Keith McCullough graded out at 97 percent pass blocking efficiency to earn offensive lineman honors.

Free safety Marc Sherman had seven tackles, four of which were unassisted, to earn recognition as defensive back of the week.

The special teams award went to Jay McDonald, who had one unassisted tackle.

Mark Bellini, Dave Wright, Kurt Gouveia and Rodney Thomas lead the team in receiving plays of the week awards. All four have been honored three times at their respective positions.

Soccercats win 3-0; Cardoso scores twice

By KATHLEEN DRUMMOND
Universe Sports Reporter

BYU's soccer team improved its current road trip record to 2-1 Monday with a 3-0 shutout over Northeastern University of Boston.

"We're getting better experience on the Astro-Turf. Playing on this type of surface means we have to play with precise timing in our passing," said Coach Jim Dusara. "It makes the game more challenging."

Cesar Cardoso led the Cougars' scoring attack. His first goal came at the 41-minute mark of the first half. The assist on the play went to Glenn Collingridge and BYU led 1-0 at the intermission.

The second period was scoreless until the last five minutes of play when Cardoso capped an offensive drive with his second goal of the game — giving the Cougars a 2-0 advantage. He was assisted on the play by Mark Lucescu.

Since Cesar is scoring good goals he is getting more confidence and playing more aggressively. This is encouraging the whole team and helps the team morale," said Dusara.

The final score of the game came on a controversial last second long-shot goal by Keith Kemsley.

Northeastern was using an electronic scoreboard to keep the game time. The clock on the scoreboard had run out when Kemsley scored the goal but the referee, who is the official timekeeper for the game, said there was still another four seconds left in the game. The goal stood and the Cougars defeated Northeastern 3-0.

Gary Niedermeier has eight saves in the game to lead the Cougars to the shutout. "Northeastern had 11 shots and could have scored if they would have had more experienced players," said Dusara.

"Corey Findlay played an excellent game on defense and Bernie Kramer and Mark Lucescu were like guards in basketball and really controlled the midfield," added Dusara. "Our bench is very strong to come out and cover for our missing starters."

The Cougars face the University of Hartford tonight in Hartford, Conn. The game will be played on grass so we have to re-adjust to grass and then go back to the Astro-Turf against Boston College on Friday," said Dusara.

Toronto trying to overcome K.C. and close calls

TORONTO (AP) — The Toronto Blue Jays say they can overcome their battle with the men in blue.

Not the 25 men wearing the visiting light blue of the Kansas City Royals — the six umpires working the American League playoffs.

The Blue Jays held a 3-2 lead in the best-of-7 American League playoffs going into Game 6 Tuesday night. Until that game, they had seen most of the close calls go against them.

"People watching these games probably think they don't want our team to win," said Toronto's George Bell, twice called out on the bases in controversial plays.

The most recent involving Bell came Sunday in Game 5, which the Royals won 2-0 to avoid elimination.

With the score already 2-0, Bell led off the fourth with a single and Cliff Johnson followed with another single. Bell tried for third but left fielder Lonnie Smith threw to third baseman George Brett, and umpire Dale Ford called Bell out.

Replays seemed to show Bell had slid in safely. "I asked George if I beat the throw and he said, 'Yeah, you beat it. I can't believe he called you out,'" Bell said of his conversation with Brett.

Toronto Manager Bobby Cox, who said earlier that he had made it a point during his managing career not to question umpires' rulings, said that call "might have been the ballgame."

"I cannot play the game and the umpires at the same time," Toronto second baseman Damaso Garcia fumed.

Many Blue Jays are not so outspoken on the subject, although they are grumbling among themselves. Others say the team has to forget about umpires Dave Phillips, Jim Evans, Vic Voltaggio, Ted Hendry, Derryl Cousins and Ford, and concentrate on the Royals instead.

"We've got to just go out and do our jobs," outfielder Jesse Barfield said.

BYU's Marc Sherman took a year off from football after two years at junior colleges in California before coming to Provo. Despite his new surroundings, Sherman has made a name for himself in the Cougars' secondary.

Sherman at ease in 'peculiar' Utah

By JEFFERY E. PIZZINO
Universe Sports Writer

BYU free safety Marc Sherman is a former high school wishbone quarterback who loves hamburgers, doesn't date much, has noticed Utah is "different" and thinks BYU Head Coach LaVell Edwards controls the weather.

"I think he's the weatherman," Sherman said about Edwards. He regards Edwards as more reliable than the weather specialists at KSL. He also thinks highly of the Cougar mentor.

"He's the greatest man in the world. The respect people have for him is unbelievable," Sherman said. "I don't think of him as my coach. I think of him as a father type."

A peculiar place
Sherman, from Oxnard, Calif., is sometimes taken back by the peculiarities of Utah. "It's different, totally different, but I can put up with it," he said. "It's a good environment. Utah's different from any place else in the United States — maybe the world."

Sherman has noticed that there is not much to do in Utah except go to the movies or rent videos, but he said the lack of entertainment here doesn't bother him too much. Even back home, he admits that he never went out much. When he did, it was usually with his buddies and they would engage in "something relaxing," he said.

His relaxed approach to life causes Sherman to think of himself as a "very, very boring person." "I don't date a lot. I don't like to ask girls out and things like that." Sherman has observed that there certainly isn't a shortage of pretty girls to pick from at BYU. On the contrary, he said "there are too many," then quickly added, "but they've got to pick you, too."

Not just a jock
As a member of the football team, Sherman said he gets noticed more than the average student. Still, he said, he doesn't want to be known as "just another jock."

"People need to like me for Marc and not for playing football here," he said.

Since he is a senior Sherman is in his last year of playing at BYU. He thinks of going on to play professional football as "a dream, but not a goal," and adds, "I'm just having fun right now."

He said his real desire in life is to become a junior college coach somewhere in Southern California.

"I want to be a successful coach," he said. "I want to learn everything I can from the coaches here." He said he would rather coach on the JC level instead of the major college level because there is less traveling involved, especially when it comes to recruiting.

"At the junior college level, you get what comes to you."

Y deserves better
In the football polls, he thinks BYU isn't getting what it deserves. "I think they (the poll voters) are scared," he said. "I think they don't want to make a mistake like they did last year by putting us in a position to reach the No. 1 spot."

Sherman had a lot of experience before reaching his current spot as BYU's starting free safety. He started out playing little league football at the age of ten. In high school he was voted Most Valuable Player.

After graduating from high school in 1981, he played JC football in Berkeley, Calif., and in Ventura, Calif., the next year. He dropped out of school for a year before ending up with the Cougars in 1984.

"They recruited me in high school to come here," he said. "I'm glad I finally came."

Sherman was a backup safety last season and also saw action on the special teams. So far this season, he said his greatest triumph has been the interception he made during BYU's 31-3 romp over Washington.

The 1983 BYU baseball team, led by Wally Joyner, Corey Snyder and Scott Nielsen, was among the best to don the blue and white. Ranked as high as No. 2 by Sports Illustrated, the hard-hitting Cougars finished regular season play as tops in the WAC.

Magic, skill, and luck secret of '83 BYU nine

Editor's note: This is the first in a four-part series remembering some of the best moments and teams BYU has fielded in intercollegiate sports during the 1980s.

By TOD BALSER
Universe Sports Writer

What was the ingredient that made the 1983 BYU baseball team one of the best in the history of the school?

Was it luck that the Cougars won 54 games and lost only 11? Perhaps it was magic that they had a team batting average of .361 for the season. Maybe it was skill that they set more records in fewer games, won more victories, achieved more national attention and made it to the NCAA Regionals as the WAC champion?

Individually, the Cougars got great performances throughout the year from pitchers Scott Nielsen and Mark De La Torre. Wally Joyner and Cory Snyder were hits with the bats and Jim Mecate was a gem on defense.

On the mound, Nielsen was especially superb, setting an NCAA record with 26 consecutive career victories. He finished the season with a 14-1 pitching record and All-America honors.

Mark De La Torre, another standout starting pitcher, had a record of 11-0 and was voted the WAC championship tourney's outstanding pitcher. Freshman Colby Ward, 9-1, and senior Kurt Lee, 6-1, rounded out the excellent starting rotation.

Relief pitchers Rick Aguilera, Jim Bowden, Mark Beavers and Steve Nielsen provided effective support for the starting pitching staff. Coming out of the bullpen in crucial situations time and time again, these pitchers gathered eight saves and proved effective in their relief duties.

As for hitting in 1983, All-America Joyner compiled outstanding statistics, leading all BYU and WAC hitters. With a batting average of .492, he knocked in 95 RBIs and slugged 23 home runs in a 65-game season. In the process, he broke eight school and 11 WAC batting records.

Combining these stats with Snyder's—whose batting average topped .450 while driving in 91 runs and hitting 21 home runs, Joyner and Snyder were one of the NCAA's best one-two punches in the country.

Snyder ended his career at BYU in 1984 as BYU and the WAC career home run king. Snyder also collected more hits as a Cougar than any player in BYU baseball history, with 291 hits in four years.

Snyder also adjusted well in his debut at shortstop, having moved over from third base. This move filled a question position for Pullins and made room for the sure-handed, hard-hitting Mark Inouye. Inouye had a great year with the bat and glove, hitting over .300 and committing only two errors in WAC play.

Tying down the other side of the infield were Joyner at first base and Rob Ray at second. Ray performed well for the Cougars with a .411 batting average.

In the outfield, Mecate, now the JV baseball coach at BYU, had a tremendous year in centerfield. Mecate combined his outstanding defensive play with a hot bat at the end of the year, receiving the championship tourney's MVP award.

Along with Mecate, Gary Cooper in left and Eric Varoz in right proved extremely effective, considering it was their collegiate debut in those positions. Cooper and Varoz performed especially well in the hitting department. Cooper, who hit .469 and Varoz, a .371 slugger, compensated for their inexperience in the outfield with great hitting performances.

The catching position was anchored by senior standout Dave Eldredge, a four year starter, and Steve Eagar, who saw a good deal of playing time behind the plate. Eldredge gave the team the leadership and direction demanded by the catching position.

These players, as a team, led BYU to its 17th-straight WAC Northern Division title with the 23-1 league record. This team also won the title at one of the most prestigious preseason tournaments in the country, The Best of the West Classic in Fresno, Calif. The Cougars broke 14 WAC and four school records.

BYU was ranked as high as second in a national poll, finished the season ranked sixth nationally by Baseball America and 17th by Collegiate Baseball. The 1983 season also gave Pullins his 300th career victory in seven seasons as the Cougar baseball mentor.

The professional ranks also thought highly of the 1983 Cougars, drafting five players and signing four. Aguilera drafted in the third round, signed with the New York Mets; Joyner, also drafted in the third round, signed with the California Angels; Scott Nielsen was drafted in the sixth round and signed with the Seattle Mariners and Kurt Lee signed with the San Francisco Giants.

Eagar, who was also drafted but chose not to sign, returned to star for the Cougars in 1984.

Ward, Beavers and Cooper return for their last season at BYU in 1986 and will try to lead this year's team to an equally impressive season.

Former walk-on now team's leader

By MARK FLETCHER
Senior Reporter

In the history of BYU gymnastics, only three gymnasts have withstood the toll the sport exacts from its participants and completed all four years of competition.

Cheryl Fletcher, a senior majoring in psychology from San Diego Calif., is the fourth.

Fletcher is the only senior on this year's squad. She came to BYU as a walk-on in the fall of 1982, tried out, and made the team. After the second semester she received a full scholarship.

"I was going to come to BYU anyway so I decided to apply for gymnastics," said Fletcher. "Coach Hill came down to San Diego to watch me compete in the county championships and asked me to come up and try-out. He gave me a scholarship that covered room and board for the first semester, then a full ride after that."

Although gymnastics is a sport full of grace and beauty, it is also physically demanding. The strength and agility required to do the tricks of today take their toll.

"Your body wears out," said Fletcher. "There are a lot of injuries. Usually you are at your best your freshman and sophomore years."

Fletcher has struggled with several injuries since the 1984-85 season. Her most recent injury is a rotator cuff impingement of her right shoulder. "You always have little aches and pains."

One of the highlights of Fletcher's career as a Cougar came during her junior year of competition. "It was nice to make regionals last year," she said. "Ten of the top twenty teams in the nation come from our region."

Only one team from each region goes on to compete in the national meet. The five-time national champion University of Utah team comes from the Cougar's region.

Another highlight for Fletcher came during last year's meet against Utah State. "That was a good meet for me," she said. "I received a score of 9.2, a team high, on the vault."

At the only senior on this year's team, Fletcher sees her role this year as one of foundation and stabilization. "I see myself as not the powerhouse competitor, but as more of a stabilizing factor."

"I enjoy competing for BYU because of the people, the academics and the chance to travel," said Fletcher. "These girls are my best friends."

Y equipment manager blends sports, religion

By TOD BALSER
Universe Sports Writer

"The first and the only" is how Floyd Johnson describes himself as athletic equipment manager at BYU.

For nearly 30 years, Johnson has been tending to his work, making friends and impressing those associated with college athletics at BYU. He was the first equipment manager for the Cougars, claiming to be the "only man to have been at BYU for nearly 30 years and to never have a promotion," then quickly pointing out he couldn't care less.

Began in 1956

Johnson, a native of Orem, began working at BYU in 1956 as the athletic equipment manager, the same title he now has. His responsibilities have always included the maintenance and upkeep of team athletic equipment. Yet, his responsibilities have developed into something of far greater importance, according to those associated with him.

Dick Felt, assistant head football coach said, "Floyd Johnson is an institution here. We don't know what we would do without him. His influence reaches far beyond the equipment room. He does so much for the coaches, players and program here."

'Father figure'

Cougar football player Shawn Knight said of Johnson, "Floyd is much more than our equipment manager, he is more of a father image to all the players. If we have problems or concerns we can go to Floyd for help and counsel. No one sees him as just an equipment manager."

As a result, Johnson takes his job seriously, and his attitude toward his work is important to his success. He believes his job is much more than taking care of equipment. "My job should be used as a missionary tool. Every chance I get, when I'm on the road with the teams or at BYU in office, I try to share the gospel. It's important to me and it's important to the Lord," Johnson said.

Many changes have taken place at BYU during Johnson's 30 years. But there are two that stand foremost in his mind. The first change is the attitude of the coaches and players, throughout sports program, in regard to the purpose of sports. According to Johnson, "Athletes at BYU now have another purpose than just winning games. Programs at BYU are to bring souls unto Christ."

Johnson feels the greatest influence toward that change occurred when LaVell Edwards became head football coach.

Missionary work

"Coach Edwards has always realized the importance of missionary work; his players that choose to serve missions are encouraged to serve, then they are given a fair opportunity to make the team again when they return. This attitude has rubbed off on all the athletic programs at BYU."

The second major change that has taken place at BYU, according to Johnson, is the training athletes go through. "Drugs and pills are no factor here. Athletes at the 'Y' are dedicated hardworkers like I've never seen before. Combined with dedicated training with the types of equipment being developed and it enables an athlete to be all his ability and force into play."

Johnson claimed throughout all his nearly 30 years with sports he has never seen a defeat at BYU. "Though there have been lost games and matches won at BYU come from the change for good seen in the men and women athletes," said Johnson. "A change that leads to Jesus Christ."

Soccer team annihilates opponent 11-0

Western State College came to town providing the BYU women's soccer team little more than some shot practice. When the smoke cleared, the score was BYU 11, WSC 0.

The win put the Cougars at 3-4 in league play.

Speaking about WSC, head coach Steve Asay said, "They're not bad — they're just inexperienced."

Former food maker, now professor out an end to astronauts' slurping

TERRY O'RAND
Universe Staff Writer

On Christmas Day in 1968, Santa delivered a real yuletide dinner to the astronauts of the Apollo VIII mission. The dinner, which included turkey and cranberry sauce and other trimmings, was specially packaged in flexible bags and eaten in a compartment by BYU professor Lyton Huber.

For the first time in history, astronauts slurping meals through straws and used cans in flexible bags.

Before joining the staff at BYU in 1976, he worked for Technology Incorporated, the key company that designs food for NASA astronauts.

While working there, Huber and his staff of 40 people designed the food for several space flight missions. "We tested and designed the food to be carried on several Apollo missions, Apollo-Soyuz, Gemini and Skylab," said Huber.

Search for variety

The objective was to find a variety of foods that could be carried on board in various forms and still retain their taste, he said. When designing foods it is necessary to keep several things in mind: safety, preservation, harmful organisms, and packaging to conserve space for storage and weight capacity.

Earlier space flights, although successful, lacked food development. Because only warm water was available to be injected into the tubes of dehydrated foods, they were of limited variety and easy to prepare, said Huber.

As a result of extensive testing and development, Huber and his colleagues introduced new packaging, preservation and a wider variety of foods.

Today, heating trays are used and there are storage areas for foods that need to be kept frozen or refrigerated in flight.

Extensive tests conducted

Extensive testing and research has been conducted to measure the various foods and food systems that could be taken and used in the zero-gravity of space. To simulate zero-gravity, a C-135 jet was flown in parabolas (up and down bowl-shaped movements). By flying in this manner, zero-gravity occurs for about 30 seconds.

"On one occasion we flew 60 parabolas in a row. This enabled us to see the possible effects of the foods and food systems in zero-gravity," said Huber.

The results of one test flight showed foods eaten with a spoon would adhere to the spoon in zero-gravity. "Therefore it was decided to be tested on an actual space flight," said Huber.

After Huber's "experiment" on Christmas of 1968, he was allowed to continue developing foods and packages for space flights. He was also able to participate in some of the missions.

Attended splashdown

"I was on the carrier when Apollo 16 splashed down. I flew back to NASA with the astronauts and consulted with them on the mission just completed. Also, I was able to go in to see the astronauts that were being quarantined by Skylab," he said.

After leaving Technology Incorporated, Huber came to BYU in 1976 where he has continued his research in foods, nutrition and packaging.

It was just what the doctor ordered BYU's McDonald Health Center came about as a result of hygiene class

RACHEL COLLIER
Universe Staff Writer

Lloyd Cullimore, M.D., gave BYU's health program a shot in the arm in 1927 by suggesting the school provide a basic hygiene class. If it were not for the efforts in initiating that first class, the McDonald Health Center might not be available to students today.

After graduating from George Washington University Medical School in Washington, D.C., Cullimore and his wife, Odessa, moved back to their native Utah. He worked on the State Board of Health in Salt Lake City, traveling around the state giving clinics for new mothers and babies.

In a visit to Provo, he noticed there were few lecturing doctors here. Within a year, he had a position as Provo City physician.

Although he didn't mind the work, he said, "I got tired of money running elevators than doing that."

He soon set up private practice. Cullimore's involvement with BYU followed after. "When I got here, someone told me that I didn't even have a class on basic hygiene," he said.

"I couldn't imagine a university emphasizing the word of Wisdom so much and not even having a class on health. Those kids couldn't afford to go to a doctor, and they just weren't taking care of themselves," he said.

Cullimore told the president of university, Franklin Stewart Harris, he ought to do something about the problem.

"He told me if I wanted the job, it was mine," Cullimore said. "They really couldn't afford to hire a full-time teacher, but they'd let me do it."

His classes were well attended, particularly by athletes.

Cullimore's reputation soon reached the coaches of the athletic teams, and they began sending injured players to his private office for treatment.

"They'd walk in there, no matter who was in front of them, and expect me to look at them," Cullimore said. "They were so used to being the big man on campus. They didn't understand that I still had to run a practice."

When he began having seven or eight patients a day walk in and demand help, Cullimore decided the situation was getting out of hand.

"I told President Harris that I would set aside one day a week, and if the players had problems, they could come in then," he said.

The number of players increased and other students started coming in with health questions. President Harris decided the students needed more convenient service, and set aside a room in one of the buildings on lower campus for a "health clinic."

proposed 45 resolutions," said Jensen. These will be taken to the national conference next year and be acted on.

The purpose of the White House Conference is to increase the public awareness of the contribution of small business, to identify its problems, to examine the status of women and minorities as small business owners, to assist small business in its role as the nation's major job creator and to develop recommendations for government action.

Utah Sen. Jake Garn has previously encouraged Utah small-business men and women to attend the Utah conference. "The White House and Congress are interested in grassroot feelings of men and women in very important segment of our economy," said Garn. "The conference is designed to be a conduit for concerns to be channeled to the president and the Congress."

Approximately 99.7 percent of the businesses in Utah are small enterprises," said Jack L. Courtemanche, conference executive director.

"The pioneer spirit that long ago turned the barren Utah desert into prosperous cities and productive farmland is still alive. The small-business men and women throughout the Beehive State are the pioneers of today," said Courtemanche. "It's no wonder 'industry' is Utah's state motto."

Another advocate of the state conference, Gov. Norm Bangert, said, "Economic development is a key goal of this administration. Small business is the backbone of Utah's economy."

Conference allows owners to gather, voice opinions

DEVON ZUMBRENNEN
Universe Staff Writer

Men and women leaders in small-business throughout the United States are gathering in their home towns to voice opinions on business issues. More than 200 such men and women gathered recently at a White House Conference on Small Business in Salt Lake City.

I found the conference to be very interesting and enlightening," said Lloyd Jensen, one of ten delegates elected to represent Utah at the national conference next August. The delegates serve as a sounding board for ideas and resolutions from small businesses, to be presented at the national conference, said Jensen.

The national conference reviews and adopts various proposals from the conferences. "These recommendations are then sent to the Congress, federal agencies or even the president, where they are reviewed and, in many cases, adopted," said Jensen, a contractor by profession. The topics of this year's resolutions included, said Jensen. One resolution called for a balancing of the federal budget. Another called for a program to be instituted to educate the American public on the effects of buying foreign goods. A third proposed that be placed on Japanese goods shipped to the United States.

Two years ago at the national conference in Washington, 89 resolutions were proposed. Of those, approximately 60 were adopted by various government agencies, said Jensen. "This year the Utah conference

Honors Program marks 25 years of development

By RACHEL COLLIER
Universe Staff Writer

After spending 25 years developing the program, BYU Honors Department officials say it is time to celebrate.

In 1959, President Earnest L. Wilkinson announced the formation of the honors program. This month, the Honors Department celebrates its 25th year of providing enhanced general education for students who are motivated to work hard for the best learning.

In fall of 1960, under the guidance of Robert K. Thomas, original director of the Honors Department, the first honors classes were taught.

A variety of celebrations are planned to commemorate the event. The major activity will take place in conjunction with the commemorative opening of the Karl Maeser Building, where, as of this year, the Honors Department is housed.

Today, Founder's Day at BYU, an academic procession featuring members of the administration and board of trustees in full academic regalia, will take place at the ASB at 9:45 a.m.

The procession will end at the Maeser Building where De LaMar Jensen, dean of the honors department, and William E. Evanson, associate dean of academics, will speak. BYU President Jeffrey R. Holland will give the commemorative opening address.

Gordon E. Crandall, grandson of Karl G. Maeser, will officiate the ribbon cutting.

There have been many changes in the Honors Department since its initiation in 1960. William Evanson was a sophomore in that first class of honors students. He is now the administrator directly responsible for the department.

"It was much smaller then, of course, and still had many problems to be worked out," said Evanson. "At first, most of the classes were honors sections of regular courses."

This situation didn't last long. "After the first couple of years, they began working on curriculum and developed other special courses," he said. Current honors seminars and freshman colloquiums are the modern versions of these special courses, he said.

The most important change that has taken place since the department was formed was the opening of honors courses to all students at the university. "Two years ago, we opened our honors courses up to all students," said Jensen, dean of the Honors Department. "This is very unusual, and not many universities do it."

Previously, there were an awful lot of students on campus capable of taking honors classes who didn't. Now thousands of students who would otherwise not have the opportunity of taking these challenging courses are able to," he said.

Jensen said the increased enrollment was an advantage to the department as well as to students because it allows them more freedom to experiment with new and different classes.

The result of faculty and budget support over the years has been a significant improvement in the quality and breadth of honors classes and activities, Evanson said.

Although many more students are taking honors classes now, there are still relatively few who graduate with honors.

"To graduate in honors, the student has to take six honors classes, fill all his major requirements and fill any other G.E. requirements not covered by his honors classes. In addition, while most students only have to complete G.E. requirements in math or a foreign language, honors graduates have to achieve the required level in both areas," Jensen said.

Besides these classes, graduates also have to complete an honors thesis. This is a substantial research project in a student's major field that a faculty member in the student's college and an honors supervisor oversee, according to Jensen.

Sharon Lamoreaux, a senior from St. Paul, Minn., majoring in international relations, has taken honors classes since her freshman year.

"I've really enjoyed all the honors classes I've taken. I've certainly had better professors in general and better quality classes," she said.

Magazine seeking 'excellent' juniors

By RACHEL COLLIER
Universe Staff Writer

TIME magazine is offering awards from $1,000 to $5,000 to 20 outstanding college juniors.

What is the quality they are looking for? Simply put, it is "excellence."

TIME is conducting a national search for 100 college juniors who have distinguished themselves by their excellence," said John Meyers, publisher of TIME magazine, in a letter to BYU President Jeffrey Holland.

Not just academics

The excellence may be in any area, Meyers said, including, but certainly not limited to, academics. Exceptional achievement in a chosen area of interest outside the classroom is even more important.

This national search is being done in celebration of the 50th anniversary of the TIME Education Program.

Judging of the applicants will be done by TIME officials and a panel of experts under the guidance of the Washington-based organization, Council for the Advancement and

Support of Education (CASE). Winners to be featured

The twenty award-winners will be featured, with pictures and biographical profiles, in a special advertising section in TIME magazine. The other eighty finalists will have their names mentioned in the section.

According to the letter, candidates must be juniors enrolled in a 4-year accredited university (BYU qualifies for that description). The immediate families of employees of Time, Inc. and CASE are not eligible.

Applications for the awards may be obtained in the Honors Office on the third floor of the Maeser Building. The deadline for submitting the applications, along with the required transcript, letters of recommendation and sample of work is Dec. 31.

"We'd like to see some BYU students go for these awards," said Leroy Gunnell, administrative assistant to the Honors Department. "We feel that BYU has a strong reputation for excellence and feel confident that there are students here who would qualify for national recognition."

Man purchases demolition permit and legally bulldozes wife's home

ENCUMCLAW, Wask. (AP) - A man bulldozed his three-bedroom, $85,000 home after his wife filed for divorce, and the destruction apparently was legal because he first took the time to pick up a demolition permit.

These living in Kree Kirkman's quiet residential neighborhood called police immediately when the destruction began Saturday.

"When I got the call over the radio, I thought it was the usual domestic case where the husband is tearing up the house — you know, throwing things around," said Officer Fred Eaton.

Kirkman showed Eaton the demolition permit he had picked up for an $11.50 fee in this city about 30 miles south of Seattle.

"There were no restraining orders" from the divorce proceedings, said the dispatcher, who declined to give her name. "So the property was communal, and there was nothing restraining him from doing it."

The house and contents were valued at $85,000 two years ago when the house was built, said Kirkman's estranged wife, Sandy, 26.

She was out of town Saturday when a neighbor called her and told her that her husband was destroying the house with a piece of heavy machinery.

The couple has been separated since last summer and Ms. Kirkman had been living in the house with her three children. She filed for divorce last Monday.

"I told him I wanted to keep the house. I guess he didn't want me to have anything," she said. "It took him 15 minutes."

Kirkman could not be reached for comment Sunday.

BYU library professor takes place as head of 85-86 national researchers' round table

Call him "King Arthur" of the librarian's round table.

Maurice P. Marchant, a BYU professor of library and information sciences, has assumed the chair of the American Library Association's Library Research Round Table for the 1985-86 school year.

Marchant was named vice-chair-elect in 1984 and assumed the position following the American Library Association summer conference in Chicago.

About 600 of the most active and best-known researchers in librarianship and information science comprise the round table's membership.

The Round Table provides a forum for reporting research in the profession and encourages development of new theory and use of superior research techniques. It also sponsors an annual research award.

Marchant is widely known for his research in applying modern management theory to libraries and for his study of library education. He is the author of more than 40 publications, including two books, Participative Management in Academic Libraries and SPSS as a Library Research Tool.

He chairs the library section of the Utah Academy of Sciences, Arts and Letters, and is vice-chair of the Utah State Library Board. He is a frequent instructor at workshops and seminars on library management and serves regularly on college and university accreditation teams. He is listed in Who's Who in America, Contemporary Authors, Who's Who in Library and Information Service and Who's Who in American Politics.

Director of admissions gets national position

As the new vice president of the American Association for Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers, BYU's director of admissions says he will have a greater opportunity to enhance the university's influence outside the state.

Jeffery M. Tanner, director of admissions for BYU, has been appointed national vice-president for professional development and regional associations in the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers (AACRAO).

"I was very flattered and delighted. It's nice to be singled out by your fellow professionals," Tanner said.

This new position involves overseeing the activities of 12 regional and 25 state organizations and developing a national professional development program.

AACRAO includes representatives from more than 2,000 colleges and universities throughout the United States and Canada. Members represent officials from admissions, financial aid, institutional research and registration departments and total more than 8,500. These members were the electoral body that voted Tanner to this position at the national meeting last April.

Tanner joined BYU's administration as a loan officer in 1973. He served as a scholarship officer and as assistant registrar for records before becoming director of admissions in 1978.

Why is Jimmy Carter smiling?

Because he knows he can find the phone numbers of his friends and professors without using the BYU Secret Service. The 1985-86 Services and Directory will go on sale the end of October. Watch for it...you'll be smiling, too!

Rock formations inspire sculptor

Y artist sits in canyons until shapes, ideas come to mind

By DEBORAH BENTLEY
Universe Staff Writer

Francis P. Riggs, whose sculpture is on display in the B.F. Larsen Gallery, HFAC, until Oct. 31, does not like to explain the meaning of his work to observers, rather he wants them to answer their own questions.

Riggs, a part-time BYU professor, started his career in abstract, unobjective art by casting a styrofoam sculpture in bronze.

Riggs' early sculptures are made of sheets of steel — bent, shaped and welded. An example of this is his "Windows of Heaven," a stained glass and steel sculpture located in front of the Clyde Engineering Building.

Because of a recent heart attack and the physical strength required for the steel sculptures, Riggs had to change his emphasis. He now concentrates on small sculptures of natural forms which he derives from rock formations.

"I love southern Utah and all those beautiful rock formations down there," he said, "and so my latest work reflects that fact."

"I'll go and sit for two or three hours in a canyon and suddenly shapes will begin to come at me from out of the walls. These shapes really don't exist. They aren't there; they're just figments of my imagination," he said. "But if you stare at something long enough these forms just start to appear."

According to his wife, Rosemary, Riggs wants people to see the positive and negative space in the sculptures and become aware of what it does.

"What is there is just as important as what isn't," she said.

One of Riggs' creations is the fountain piece located in Exchange Place in Salt Lake City. According to Riggs, it was part of a beautification plan funded by local merchants. It took eight or nine months for the plans for the sculpture to clear with the mayor and others, and has since become a controversial piece among Salt Lake City residents.

"I had the opportunity to get involved on a very large piece in the center of Salt Lake City," Riggs explained. "It turned out to be very controversial because we injected this very stark form (which somebody said looked like it had landed from another planet) in the middle of these very old, traditional buildings."

"I think the average person would rather see a bronze horse, or a cowboy, or a lion. They would have felt more comfortable with it. I felt the need to do something that set up a very strong contrast. But I don't apologize for it."

"We learn skills in school but we aren't taught about creativity — we aren't taught to see."

— Francis P. Riggs
— BYU professor and sculptor

The controversy did not upset Riggs because he would "rather have someone have a strong feeling about it, even if it's hate, than no feeling at all."

While many people would have Riggs explain his work and the meanings behind the abstract forms, Riggs prefers that his viewers interpret the work themselves.

One time while Riggs was viewing his work, he overheard two young boys discussing the sculpture.

"I was standing there one day and these two boys came over. The older boy asked the younger, 'What do you think the artist intended?' And the other boy replied, 'That's easy, it looks just like the mountains behind it.'"

"That tells me all we have imagination when we're young and then our system beats it out of us," he said. "We learn skills in school but we aren't taught about creativity — we aren't taught to see."

Riggs found that many people have a hard time understanding his sculptures.

"The public has had very little exposure to art," he said. "They don't know what art is and they don't know how to deal with it." They want an entertaining story behind the work, he added. But with abstract shapes and forms, it is not that easy.

"Art to them is a photographic likeness of something and as long as it is, they can identify with it. When it starts moving away from that, it becomes harder for them to deal with."

Riggs said he has nothing against realistic art, but he believes there is also room for abstract art.

"People can see the sunset because it hits them over the head," he explained. "It's the subtle things around us that make life so wonderful."

Riggs' abstract art is derived from shapes he imagines after hours of rock gazing. While his sculptures are often misunderstood, he believes the subtle things found in abstract art make "life wonderful."

CBS obtains top rating slot, halting NBC's winning streak

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS got a boost from its regular series and movies and from the competing baseball playoffs on NBC to take its first victory of the 1985-86 television season, according to figures released Tuesday by the A.C. Nielsen Co.

With "Murder, She Wrote," "Dallas" and "60 Minutes" in the Top 10, CBS was able to halt NBC's winning streak that included every summer week except one and the first two weeks of the current prime-time campaign.

Carson succeeds after failure

NEW YORK (AP) — Two decades before "Saturday Night Live," there was a short-lived, prime-time series that featured parodies of television shows and a spoofy news segment. Johnny Carson says the program's failure was his biggest disappointment in show business.

"I was pretty dejected when it went off the air," he said. "I thought the show was ahead of its time." "The John Carson Show," a comedy-variety series, ran on CBS from June 1965 to March 1966. Carson did offbeat sketches, zany news interviews, including one with the inhabitants of a flying saucer, and, for a while, he kept the show in the family. Jolly, his wife at the time, sang on the show.

One wonders what the course of late-night TV would have been if CBS had stuck with the skinny comic from Nebraska. Can anyone imagine NBC's "The Tonight Show" without Johnny Carson?

NBC would rather remember what it's been like for the past 23 years — with Carson.

Carson said when he replaced Jack Paar on "Tonight" in 1962, he wasn't all that self-confident, and he never dreamed of spending a quarter-century chained to his late-night desk.

"I was just trying to get through the first night," he said. "Paar was so mercurial that I thought that would be very hard to overcome. But after six months, I had become comfortable. This was the kind of stuff I had already been doing on TV. I was used to the live, loose TV format."

As his popularity grew, Carson said he never saw his late-night success as a springboard to a prime-time series or movie stardom.

"People have sent me movie scripts over the years, but most were pretty bad," he said. "Anybody could make a movie, but I'm on every night playing myself, so it would be hard to make the transition and play a part on the screen. And, besides, why put yourself out there to get poleaxed (by the critics)?"

"As for sitcoms, that format isn't for me. I'm doing exactly what I want — monologues, interviews, sketches. In sitcoms, you're forced into playing a role every week, and it never changes."

Some TV critics charge that Carson hasn't changed either, that his TV act is stale. They say people watch "Tonight" out of habit and by default. "Sometimes you fall into a trap, but what you have to do is look at a month or two of shows," Carson said. "You can't judge it on a night-by-night basis, or you'd go nuts. I think you learn pretty quickly in this job that you can't be good every night. . . . If you have a bad night, you just have to forget it and come back the next night."

Carson's current contract ends in 1987, exactly 25 years on the job, but the 58-year-old Carson won't say that's the end of the road. "If I got tired, if we weren't No. 1 in the ratings, maybe, but the audience tells you when to quit. I'll know it's time because the ratings won't be there."

Hypnosis unreliable for accurate recollection

NEW YORK (AP) — Hypnosis, though it sometimes enables subjects to remember things they cannot recall consciously, often produces recollections that are inaccurate in detail, according to a panel of the American Medical Association.

Skaggs wins country title, 11 others take home awards

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A misty-eyed Ricky Skaggs, who dropped out of high school in the 12th grade to play music full time, won the prestigious "Entertainer of the Year" award from the Country Music Association.

Skaggs received the honor, and one other, during the nationally televised CMA awards show at the Grand Ole Opry.

His award broke a three-year hold on the top honor by Alabama, a four-piece band who sought an unprecedented fourth straight selection.

"It looks awful good out there, but this looks better," Skaggs said as he looked at the award and choked back sobs.

His band also was voted top instrumental group.

Skaggs, of Louisa, Ky., has had nine No. 1 hits, including "Country Boy" in June and "Uncle Ben" a year ago. He dropped out of school in 1971, needing one credit for a high school diploma, and left his Appalachian mountain home to become a performer.

Anne Murray and Kris Kristofferson, who hosted the show, also presented awards in 12 categories of other country favorites.

Awards are as follows:
Single of the Year (awarded artist): The Judds for "Why Not Me"
Song of the Year (awarded to songwriter): "God Bless the USA," written by Lee Greenwood.
Album of the Year: "Does Your Heart Ever Cross Your Mind" by George Strait.
Female Vocalist of the Year: Reba McEntire.
Male Vocalist of the Year: George Strait.
Vocal Group of the Year: The Judds.
Vocal Duo of the Year: Anne Murray and Dave Loggins.
Music Video of the Year: "All My Body Friends are Comin' Over Tonight" by Hank Williams Jr.
Instrumentalist of the Year: Ch Atkins.
Instrumental Group of the Year: Ricky Skaggs' Band.
Horizon Award: Sawyer Brown.

resident Reagan seeks support or White House-backed budget plan

ILWAUKEE (AP) — President Reagan told Congress on Tuesday against attempts to cut an administration-backed budgeting plan, warning that "the American people watching."

speeches prepared for a Republican funding event here and delivered earlier in Boise, Idaho, Reagan said the Democrat-led House "took up in the right direction" Friday by passing its version of the budgetary measure that already had been approved by the Republican-controlled Senate.

"But we still have a large hurdle to get over," he said. "In a few days, the House-Senate conference will meet to iron out their differences."

"The House-Senate conference committee should realize that the American people are watching."

The administration-backed plan calls for legislation that would require reducing the federal deficit, now approximately $200 billion, to zero by 1991. The administration favors a Constitutional amendment that would require a balanced budget from then on, except in cases of national emergency.

Reagan, who opposes protectionist legislation in Congress but has announced steps he says will help American industries confronted with unfair competition, told his Idaho audience, "Quick fixes aren't the answer."

"We've proposed to any policy that raises trade barriers against our products," the president said. "When our farmers are under stress as they are now, we must not hurt them further with a trade policy that cuts them off from the foreign markets that are the key to recovery for our agricultural economy."

Bangladesh auditorium roof collapses, killing at least 50

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — The roof of a university auditorium collapsed during heavy rain Tuesday night, killing at least 50 students and injuring more than 300, rescue officials reported.

Students and officials at the scene said the toll could be much higher. They said the roof had been under repair.

About 500 Dhaka University students were watching a popular television program when the roof came down at 9 p.m. during heavy rains caused by a storm approaching the southern coast of Bangladesh from the Bay of Bengal.

State television asked for blood donations. Many of those injured were said to be in critical condition. Two hospitals near the university were packed with victims. Fellow students carried many of them in because of a shortage of stretchers.

"There is an acute shortage of blood and medicine," said a doctor at the Post-Graduate Medicine Hospital.

lobbyists invited to rediscover and share during National Stamp Collecting Month

People casually paste stamps on envelopes and toss them into the nearest mailbox. Others painstakingly select stamps into albums with tweezers.

Stamp collecting is the world's most popular hobby, according to Merlin Wright, a post office official. For the fifth consecutive year, it has merited national recognition as National Stamp Collecting Month. This year's theme is "Rediscovering and Sharing."

Stamp collecting has been a popular hobby since the late 1800s, Wright said. "It is a hobby that bridges generations."

Wright, a sophomore from Shelburne, Vermont, majoring in chemical engineering, said collecting stamps when he was 3 years old. "I got started when my father inherited my grandfather's collection 19 years ago," he said.

Contests with brothers and friends, and his three brothers used to have contests to see who could get the most and best stamps from different countries. "I have the most from the U.S. and all of us specialize in other countries," he said.

"Stamp collecting really brought us together as a family because we had that common interest," he said. "Stamp collections or packets became great gifts within the family."

"This year we are encouraging older collectors to pull out their albums and share them with their children and grandchildren," Wright said.

Stamp collecting, also known as philately, originated as soon as the first penny back came off the press.

Trading and collecting was a favorite pastime among London school boys in the 1800s. Because the hobby requires little or no equipment, it is popular for young and old alike. Today there are 20 to 30 million collectors in the United States alone.

Stamp collecting is a hobby that can teach the history of a country, its state of economy at a particular time, current affairs, main interests of the people and even what kind of animals live in a country.

Mary Toppets of the Post post office, said, "Every year, after school children have had a chance to settle in, we offer a stamp collecting program called the Benjamin Franklin Stamp Club."

"At the post office we offer a number of inexpensive packages that the children can buy to start a hobby of their own," she said. "Canceled stamps are the most inexpensive."

Starting a collection

The best way to get a collection started is to get involved with a local collector, Davis said. "Get the local post office collections. Then tell your neighbors and other people that you are a collector."

"After a while you find that you have filled an album. Then you're hooked."

Davis said that when he was in the MTC he told everyone he collected stamps. "The other missionaries saved their stamps for me. By the time I left, I had a shoe box full of stamps from all over the world to add to my collection."

Local post offices, stamp clubs and stamp dealers will be sponsoring activities through October, highlighting stamps and stamp collecting, Wright said.

"We believe an adult who introduces a youngster to stamp collecting is giving the child an educational activity that will last a lifetime."

Peaker says understanding needed between U.S., Soviets

NICHELLE HIGHAM
Senior Staff Writer

There are many reasons why westerners do not understand the current relationship between the Soviet Union and the United States, said a European correspondent for Christian Science Monitor.

One of the difficulties in understanding is comprehending the intertwining of different fields, said Elizabeth at Tuesday's Forum assembly. Pond has been a correspondent in Moscow, Tokyo and Saigon.

"In different fields of understanding include the confrontation in the Soviet Union, diplomacy and conflict, military and nuclear strategy and the use of high technology on the nuclear weapons balance."

He said that if all four are not looked at simultaneously when interpreting the East-West relationship, "it is misleading."

According to Pond, the Soviet system and government conservatism incarnate. "The described Soviet conservatism as negative, 'stuck in old habits and reluctant to new directions.'"

Normalities exist in the Soviet Union that Americans never had to deal with. "In America, peace, food, money are the norms, but in the Soviet Union, these things factors have not been present in the past. Nor began for Soviet citizens following Stalin's purges his death in 1953."

Today, the Soviet Union lags far behind Western consumerism. "Soviet priority is in the military and heavy industry — consumer goods get squeezed," said Dr. Eric Jones, an assistant professor in political science at BYU who was asked to comment on the Soviet citizen.

In the United States, the consumer comes first, Jones said. "If the consumer is unable to get the products he needs and wants, he screams bloody murder and gets rid of the political leaders." The Soviet citizens do not have that same luxury.

According to Pond, Soviet officials tend to be more militaristic and less diplomatic than their western counterparts. The Soviets are more likely to attempt to gain marginal military victories, such as those made in Ethiopia and Angola, than they are to stay at the bargaining table.

Paranoia for national security plays a large part in the foreign policy ideology of Soviet officials. We must understand Soviet attitudes, Pond said, "Absolute security (for the Soviet Union) means insecurity for other countries."

According to Pond, a sense of crisis takes over Soviet ideology as Soviet officials are beginning to feel they are losing their grasp on Eastern Europe.

They are concerned for the first time that East Germany is too close to West Germany, he said. Officials also realize that their economic system is "just not functioning properly."

Soviet officials, Jones said, are also afraid to allow the citizens the ability to copy printed materials.

Women escape from state prison through window

POINT OF THE MOUNTAIN (AP) — Two female inmates fled the women's facility at Utah State Prison here Tuesday morning, Correction's Department officials said.

Department spokesman Juan Benavidez said Shirley Estrada, 29, of Murray, and Shirley Gabor, 19, of Hamstead, Md., broke out a small fold-out window and climbed down two floors using sheets tied together.

The escape occurred between 6 a.m. and 7 a.m., Benavidez said.

Estrada is serving a zero to 5-year term for attempted robbery, and Gabor is serving a zero to 5-year term for auto theft.

Estrada was described as 5-foot-3 and 120 pounds, with brown eyes and hair and a small scar over her left eye.

Gabor was described as 5-foot-5 and 110 pounds, with brown eyes and brown hair.
